SECRETARY'S PREFACE

The Secretary presents the Second Report of the Class of 1918 with many apologies. Its tardiness in appearing may be excused slightly but not completely by the difficulty of gathering material, and the fact that the Secretary finished law school and entered matrimony since the Triennial Reunion. The report is not nearly as complete as any Secretary would like it to be. There are a number of cases where it is physically impossible to get men to return their class lives. The future reports depend absolutely on the cooperation of every member of the class, and unless blanks are returned as soon as possible after they are sent out all subsequent reports will simply be a lot of miscellaneous information rather than an accurate account of what the class has been doing. Once again the plea is made for a sincere and energetic cooperation in this respect.

The Secretary wishes to express his thanks to the individual members who have written memorial lives of those men who were killed in war. A great many of them wished these articles to be unsigned and so this policy was made uniform.

FRANKLIN E. PARKER, JR.,
Secretary.

TREASURER'S REPORT

Twenty-fifth Reunion Fund Committee

D. M. Little, Jr., Chairman
G. A. Percy,
J. K. Berry, Jr.,
E. C. Bennett, Treasurer,
93 Water Street, Boston, Mass.

The following letter received from the Treasurer of the Twenty-fifth Reunion Fund Committee is printed in lieu of a formal report of that Committee:

"Thus far, we have received $2149.00 from 138 contributors. Several have given the entire $240.00 in a lump, and a few have contributed less than twelve.

Four $10,000 20 yr. endowment policies have been issued as follows, or		$2149.00
(1) George A. Percy	$483.00
(2) Edwin C. Bennett	481.00
(3) David M. Little, Jr	482.00
(4) L. B. Keane	478.00	1924.00
	$1924.00	$225.00

This leaves $225.00 in the bank.

Our aim is to get another $10,000 in force by Dec. 30th, if possible, in order that we may send out another Class notice to the effect that we have accomplished one half our task in six months. This means that we must collect about $270 in the next ten days. Dave, George, Jack and I are tagging all whom we can. You might get after such men as Gus Read and any others whom you can reach personally or by phone in a spare moment. Perhaps you will not care to mention the names of those on whose lives insurance has been placed. I will leave that to your discretion. Our deed of trust is nearly ready to be signed, making the Boston Safe Deposit & Trust Co. trustee. We are doing all in our power toward keeping mailing addresses up to date and intend to keep you informed. There is a tremendous amount of work involved in this thing, but I think that it will form a good nucleus for working up a real Class organization. We are all very optimistic about the Fund, but the only way to make it a success is by hard work. You know the general scheme of the Fund, so I have not gone into it, merely having given you the facts in figures. Can you not make your report perform the function of an appeal for support? Hoping that this will serve your purpose, I am, as ever, E. C. Bennett."

9 o'clock. Left Cambridge in special trolley cars accompanied by band.

10:30 o'clock. Arrived in Swampscott in various conditions.

11-1 o'clock. Athletic events. Baseball with ninety on a side. "Swede" Nelson knocks eight home runs. Percy knocked out of the box. Silverman punishes all comers at craps. Harrison and White do special gymnastic feats. Complete exhaustion prevented by application internally of liquid stimulants.

1 o'clock. Luncheon, substantial and liquid.

2:30-5:30 o'clock. Aquatic sports. Several crews launched, swamped and beached. Destruction of much tonnage. Beach spectators shocked but amused. Concentrated bathing and swimming. Life savers called. Fifty corpses rescued from Atlantic. Stimulants applied. Artificial respiration. Temporary losses recovered. Harrison and Weld fight World War on opposite precipices.

5:30 o'clock. Dinner, substantial and liquid, but slightly somnolent. Award of prizes. Little gets medal for being sober.

7 o'clock. Return to Cambridge by special trolley. Band sleeping peacefully after administration of curative sedatives throughout day. Police met and eluded. Rest.

Tuesday, June 21, 1921

10:30 o'clock. Class Meeting, New Lecture Hall. Bennett and Berry talk insurance with marked success.

3 o'clock. March to Stadium in costume, 1000 strong. Loud shouts of praise and acclamation on part of populace. President Lowell says '18 is thing of beauty and joy forever. Class Day Exercises. Ivy Oration interrupted by distinct monosyllabic sounds from White. Confetti Battle, '18 conquers the Stadium. Abduction of several spectators. Peace comes with darkness. McElwain limps home on broken golf club. Higgins looking for his voice.

Wednesday, June 22, 1922

10:30 o'clock. Athletic meet with '15; '18 wins every event. Dr. Sargent much impressed.

2 o'clock. March to Stadium in costume. Triumph of color, heavy purplish aura about '18 ranks. Uncertain but steady marching; excellent illustration of gyroscope. Baseball game. Yale vanquished through aid of '18. Peace and quiet thereafter.

Thursday, June 23, 1922

Commencement. Several absences. Alumni luncheon in yard. Departure for New London and way stations; '18 seems to have aged somewhat, but it limps bravely along.

(Special Dress Correspondence)

A ukase was promulgated today by the Ataman of the Class of 1918 and his fellow Adamites that a Triennial Reunion of 1918 would take place this year from June 20 to 23. This announcement followed a cabinet meeting at which the cabinet was emptied and only the Ataman was able to emerge, that is under his own steam. Immediately the story was spread to the four corners of the earth, by telegraph, telephone and Terry. The latest returns from Singapore indicate that not a Malay member of the Class will be absent. The Rhodesian delegation (plenipotentiary and pleniviniary) has already started, 100 per cent strong, in order to reach Cambridge before the first cork is pulled.

When interviewed the Ataman staggered and said in part: "We want every man of 1918 back at this crisis and on this momentous occasion. We have planned amusement such as the Cossacks in their most unrestrained moments have never imagined. The duty to come is great; the joy upon arrival will be greater. We have made this announcement early so that everybody could start now to put kopecs and roubles into an old sock. We will accept insanity as an excuse for non-appearance; pecuniary reasons will be summarily dealt with. My cerebration is and always has been in such shape that I cannot give accurate statements as to financial matters, but of this I am sure, an insignificantly small daily saving between now and June will more than cover all expenses, including the exorbitant railroad rates permitted by the Imperial Government. Go spread the good word, my men."

The Ataman then hiccoughed a few times and was led away.

THE FACULTY FRENZIED

The morale of the University has been considerably raised since 1918 graduated. Undergraduates have assumed a more Puritanical air; they walk in a straight and dignified air and actually study. The division of Ethics and Confucian Culture fear that if this Assyrian host comes down on Cambridge, the fate of Sennacharib will seem like a strict compliance with the Geneva convention: One instructor in Fine Arts 1327xxx said to our co-respondent: "I never knew of a more worthless and indelicate aggregation than 1918. Not one of them ever tasted tea."

GOODIES ARE GLEEFUL

One set of people in Cambridge is particularly jubilant over 1918's return. The Hibernian Order of Goodies passed a vote of thanks at its last meeting. These ladies, whom 1918 will probably remember as being more or less proficient with the broom and the dustpan, have entered new fields of endeavor during the last few years. Their double-boilers are now working overtime and the aroma which comes from their kitchens gives one that "I want to linger" feeling. Mrs. Terence McGillicudy, The Grand Past Mistress of the above-named order, said: "I always sid they would all become Admirals, they could shtand stormy weather so well." The goodies who formerly had woolen coats now wear Alaskan seal and after the 1918 Triennial Reunion they plan to investigate the Russian Sable market.

GENERAL ORDER NO. 1

The following orders have been issued from General Headquarters, Field-Marshals Percy, Murray and Franklin signing the same.

1. Every man of 1918 will be in Cambridge on June 20.

2. Every man of 1918 will start saving now. (Money and other things.)

We're Throwing You the Life Line For the Last Time Grab Hold Before You Make That Fatal Gurgle, Gurgle Noise

☞ Applications for the 1918 Triennial must be in by June 8. It will be impossible to provide for those who have not signed up by that time. Send in your check now; if you find you cannot return and notify the Committee by June 15, your money will be refunded.

TO THE CURRENCY-SHY—TO THE SCEPTICAL—TO THE "DAMNED CARELESS" AND TO THE OVERWORKED

You are the people we want to address especially. This is the last chance you have of showing a true loyalty to the Class of 1918 and a live interest in its Triennial. 1917 had 236 men back last year; our class numbers 725. WE WANT TO BEAT 1917's RECORD ATTENDANCE. No matter what your excuse is, it's a rotten one. Where There is a bill, There's a way. A soft word in an employer's ear, a gentle loan from parent or friend, a jacking-up of your own regularity will solve all difficulties. THIS MEANS YOU FOR IT'S YOU WE WANT.

Urbana, Ill., June 1, 1921

DEAR FRIEND AL: —

I must take my pen in hand, for I got in on the inside of the magnate's meeting the other day. You know Ben Johnson, Gerry Herrman and all them boys. They are renigging on baseball — even the big league stuff — and from the mean line they were shooting some big doings are up. The talk was all about the 1918 Triennial which you must have heard of in the daily dope-sheets. I knew you were going to take this in, but the results of the secret-practice aren't out yet to the gen. pub. and I just got to shoot this to you quick while it's hot and savory. Believe me, Al, from what I heard them magnates arranging, this little fellow here is going to arrive in Cambridge early on Sunday; I'm willing to sleep with the Widow Nolan if the University has run out of beds. Monday morning the Boston El. is going to run some special rolling stock out to Harvard Square and then you and me are going to place our seats on a plush cushion and be slid down to Swampscott for the day.

The New Ocean House is all taken over for us and the amount of sea food that is being knocked on the head makes my palate jingle like Joe Knowles' bat just before he landed on an Eli curve. I've got my own Crimson Annette swimming suit all carved out now — it's going to show some figure when it gets in that Swampscott Surf. Tuesday they say is Class Day. Well we never have seen a real one — Von Hindenburg and his Dutchmen busted up ours, and this is our first real chance of serving at one. In the morning there is a Class Meeting — not a long winded coaching affair, but just enough to publish the most recent bulletins. That afternoon we march to the Stadium and you ought to see our uniforms. They are immense. We get soaked with confetti and roses and bricks, for there are a few mean ones in the stands. Spreads follow that, with lovely women. Bring your wife right along, Al, she won't slow you up a bit and some other fellow will find her amusing even if you don't. Singing in the Yard at Night by the undergraduate Carusos, all the sob stuff, with "Fair Harvard" in tremulo bringing tears to the eyes of your Aunt Eliza.

Wednesday morning is a big time. Athletic events of every sort. We've signed up all the University coaches and the whole equipment. 1915 has challenged us for the Home-Bun Pennant and we're to take them on in baseball, track, rowing, tennis, lacrosse, golf, soccer, and tiddle-de-winks. Every man in a game and a game in every man. Put linament on that south-paw of yours — you'll need only natural warming up. In the afternoon the Yale ball team appears — do you remember the way your Salome used to fool 'em, Al? Well things haven't changed. You and me and the others are going to march down to the field where President Lowell, President Harding, and President McGillicudy are going to review us. The 1918 banner is going to fly right in the front of the whole P-rade. Then, Al, we're going to sit in and on reserved seats and Yell like Hell.

Thursday, well come on and you'll see for yourself. It's Commencement Day and more interesting than Siwash graduation. Snap out of your Cram's Office Blues, Alfred; feed the Gillette a new blade. Write me when you're starting.

Yrs. in the bonds,

Vol. II DECEMBER, 1921 No. 1

THERE MAY BE A PANIC IN 1943 !!!!

Here Are Some Advance Financial Tips to Avoid Insolvency:

JUNE 1943 IS 1918'S TWENTY-FIFTH REUNION

I. According to time-honored custom, every Harvard class, at the time of its 25th Reunion, makes a gift of $100,000 to the University.

II. We want to benefit from the experience of past classes.
In majority of cases, classes have waited until three or four years before their 25th Reunion, and then have tried to rush the crowd together and bleed 'em. When the revolvers had been finally put away, it generally showed that $000,042.36 had been collected.

III. What has this meant?
That a dozen or more generous classmates have been called upon to underwrite practically the entire amount.

WE DON'T WANT THIS TO HAPPEN! A GRAND, GLORIOUS, GORGEOUS SCHEME IS HEREWITH PROPOSED !!

Due to the ingenuity of some insurance specialists which 1918 has produced, a divine plan has been conceived to keep away all troubles or worries.

(1) $100,000 in insurance policies can be written this year. These policies mean the certainty of 1918 having its gift to the University in 1943, and a saving to the class of $24,000.

(2) The plan also means dividend returns which will materially aid in financing all class functions in the future — a fund which will represent every man in the class and not a few with large purses.

(3) This is what it means from YOU:
$12.00 per year, or $240.00 in all, spread over 20 years.

A FEW PERTINENT REMARKS:

Gift for University in 1943 = $100,000 definitely assured.
Dividends available for class activities:

1924.	Sexennial	$1430.00
1928.	Decennial	2600.00
1933.	Quindecennial	4615.00
1938.	Duodecennial	6498.00

Princeton classes have been using a similar plan for many years with great success.

The Class Committee wants the expression of every man's opinion on this question. If you are for saving money, for giving the class absolute financial stability, for reducing your share in class expenses of the future, vote yes on the enclosed plan. But this would mean that you would be willing to come through regularly, to send in that yearly driblet without the pressure of a sheriff. It's a business proposition

It means less money from you and more for 1918! Think it over!!

TEAR OFF HERE

To the Class Committee:

I { am / am not } in favor of the Insurance Plan to raise the class fund.

(Signed) .....

Frederick Mitchell Atwood

Frederick Atwood was born in Hartford, Conn., October 20, 1895. He prepared for college at Quincy (Mass.) High School, entering directly from there. An excellent scholar and full of energy, he at once selected an undergraduate activity into which he threw his whole personality—debating. Throughout his three years at Cambridge he was the dominant figure in the class in all matters concerning debating, and believing that concentration was the real key to success, he centered his whole attention on this one chosen field. He was a member of the Freshman Debating Society and Manager of the Freshman Debating Team. He then became a member of the University Debating Society and that which he wished most, Manager of the University Debating Team. He was a man of many ideas and more friends, and had he not been called away from his Senior year by the war, one may be sure he would have put into effect many of his pet plans to make debating a major intellectual sport, of the same interest to the whole undergraduate body as athletics.

Fred was a member of the University R. O. T. C. from February to August, 1917, and then entered the Officers' Training Camp at Plattsburg. On November 27, 1917, he was commissioned Second Lieutenant, Infantry, and assigned to Company M, 58th Infantry, 4th Division. He joined his regiment at Camp Greene, Charlotte, N. C. The next spring, in May, 1918, Fred sailed for France. He was sent to the front a short time after his arrival and was killed in action on August 6, 1918, near Fismes, on the Vesle river during the Marne-Aisne offensive.

Walker Blaine Beale

In every class there is one person who is soon raised to a position of leadership through no other reason than the love and confidence he inspires in his fellow men. And in our hearts we know this is the very best and truest of reasons. Such a man may have great ability, he usually has; but the force which is directly and consciously operating in his favor is not one of mind or intellect—it is heart, character and love. Our man of this kind was Walker Beale. We realized it from the first fall days of 1914 when Walker went out for Freshman football and was elected captain of the Smith Hall team. He was no great athlete, but he loved games and he was a real leader of that silly little team which wallowed around in the mud trying to put Standish and Gore in their proper places. Before that inglorious season was over all the dub football players on that team adored Walker Beale. This feeling spread and grew with tremendous momentum—it never stopped increasing while Walker was in Cambridge. In every position of trust which he held the revelation of an unusual ability only intensified a feeling which before was sufficiently secure to last forever. And so our realization of his worth grew into a realization that no class ever had nor would ever have anyone just like him.

An enumeration of his activities is so futile. It would have meant so little to him and means little to his friends. What remains is a knowledge that a great person, a perfect mixture of sympathy, fineness, and humanness, had been among us, that is the thing which lasts forever. Yet we can remember that Walker was on the Freshman Football Squad, the Freshman Crew Squad, in Social Service Work, Secretary of the Republican Club, on the Freshman Entertainment Committee, on the Student Council, 1916-17, Vice-President of the Sophomore Class, on the Sophomore Class Executive Committee and a member of almost every undergraduate club in Cambridge. And in addition to this he was loved by the goodies, the janitors, the postmen and everybody who had anything to do with him. With all this he was a real human; he was not filled with any pseudo uplift nonsense, nor did he pose as the epitome of virtue. He had just enough human facilities to make him dear to men of every different opinion and experience. What he did do was to let out completely and naïvely his whole exuberant and glorious personality, and it won everybody and everywhere.

This is the type of man which war takes. He entered the Officers' Training Camp at Fort Meyer in May, 1917, and was commissioned First Lieutenant, Infantry, on August 15, 1917. He was assigned to the 310th Infantry, 78th Division on September 26th. In May, 1918, he was designated officer in command of Company I of the 310th Infantry and shortly afterwards he sailed for France. On September 18, 1918, he was out reconnoitering with some men of another division near Xammes. On their way back, while about 200 yards from the German lines, they came out of the woods. The Germans had a direct observation from a church steeple. A bomb was dropped into the midst of them from this observation. Walker received severe wounds in the head, legs and chest which proved fatal and he died at the Triage at Envezin that evening.

Malcolm Cotton Brown

Malcolm Brown was born in Chicago, Ill., on March 26, 1897. He prepared at St. Paul's School and remained in college one year as an undergraduate. During the summer of 1917 he attended the Military Engineering Camp of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. On his way home to Hinsdale, Ill., he stopped at Toronto and made his application for entrance into the Royal Flying Corps. He took his examination and was accepted at once, receiving his instruction at the Canadian camp, Toronto, and at Fort Worth, Texas. On January 12, 1918, he was commissioned Second Lieutenant, and early in February he sailed for England. There he completed his training and in June he had become a First Lieutenant and a service pilot. He joined Squadron Ninety, a picked squadron of pilots, most of whom came from the Western Hemisphere. Brown was considered an aviator of unusual promise, but on July 23, 1918, the machine in which he was making a flight was defective and it collapsed above the aerodrome near Gloucester. Even his skill could not save him and he crashed to the ground and was killed instantly. His life was a sacrifice to the newest branch of military operations. Yet his excellence in this field and his enthusiasm for it made the entire time during which he served one of thrilling enjoyment and complete satisfaction.

Elliot Adams Chapin

Elliot Chapin was born in West Somerville, Mass., on May 10, 1895. He came to college from Andover and settled down in Gore Hall where he commenced a career of three years at Cambridge, one of steady and quiet progress. He was a person of much influence among his friends, thoroughly modest about an excellent mental equipment, and with a joyous sense of humor. Chapin's laugh was something to remember.

He enlisted on April 4, 1917, in the U. S. Naval Reserves, Coast Patrol, but in August he decided that he could be of more value in some other branch of service. He therefore obtained his discharge from the Naval Reserves in August, 1917, and on August 25 he enlisted in the Royal Flying Corps, British Army. He received his training at Toronto and at Fort Worth, Texas, where he was commissioned Second Lieutenant. On December 31 he sailed for England on the Tunisan, as part of the convoy of the Tuscania, which was torpedoed off the Irish Coast. In England he received further training at Salisbury and in April, 1918, he was commissioned First Lieutenant. He was attached to the 99th Bombing Squadron and ordered to France. He and several others flew over the Channel and across France to the headquarters of the 99th, six miles from Nancy. On June 27th the squadron was attacked when about 25 miles over the enemy lines. The gas tank of the machine which Chapin was driving was hit and the machine burst into flames. He and his observer went down from about 13,000 feet somewhere near Metz.

Philip Cunningham

Philip Cunningham was born in Gloucester, Mass., on June 21, 1894. He prepared at Volkmann School and spent three years as an undergraduate in Cambridge. He was of a serious nature, quiet and studious. Though he had no illusions about war, he was intensely interested in military affairs and had much training as a soldier in the Massachusetts State Militia before our entrance into the war. Those who had served with him declared him one of the finest of soldiers.

As a member of the 1st Massachusetts Field Artillery, Battery A, he was on the Mexican Border during the summer of 1916. When war was declared in 1917 he went, on furlough, to Newport News to train for aviation. While there he was ill with typhoid fever and by the time he had recovered, his furlough had expired. He rejoined his regiment, which had been federalized and later designated Battery A, 101st Field Artillery, 26th Division. He sailed for France September 5, 1917. At the beginning of the Château Thierry drive, in July, 1918, Battery A was at Lucy le Bocage, close behind Bois Belleau. There had been heavy fighting during the night of July 18, but at about 7.30 o'clock the next morning the firing ceased and the men started on their way to breakfast. Suddenly a shower of shell fell in and about the battery position. Cunningham was killed instantly and several others were wounded. He lies buried in an American cemetery, near the Marne, at Bézu le Guéry.

Stephen Whitney Dickey

Stephen Whitney Dickey was born in New York on January 2nd, 1897, the son of Charles Dunston Dickey and Louise Whitney Dickey. He prepared for college at St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H., as had his brother and his father before him.

Whit was always one of the most popular boys in school. He stood well in his studies and was a good athlete, although not an outstanding one. His interest was principally in rowing.

He entered Harvard in the Fall of 1914 along with many friends from St. Paul's. He there continued to add to his wide circle of devoted friends, won him by his cheerfulness and his ever-present smile.

When the War came on he was too young to enlist in the first camps but on January 2nd, 1918, his 21st Birthday, he enlisted in the National Army, and was assigned to the New York Division then training at Camp Upton, Long Island. He attended the Officers' Training Camp, and although recommended for a Second Lieutenancy, was ordered abroad so soon afterwards that he did not then receive his commission. He became a Corporal in May and a Sergeant in June. On the field of battle he was promoted to a Second Lieutenancy, and three weeks later was transferred to Company C, 110th Infantry, 28th Division.

As an officer all his gentlemanly instincts and thought for others came to the fore. An unfailing effort to care for the welfare of his soldiers, and indomitable cheerfulness are two traits which endear an officer to his men more than any other. Whit had these two to a marked degree, with the natural consequence that he was adored by his men who would have followed him anywhere.

A fellow officer in his Regiment wrote as follows:

"Time and again through August and September, his quiet ignoring of personal risk placed him in positions where none could understand how he escaped and we began to believe he bore a charmed life. During the first day and a half of the Argonne Drive, he could be found wherever the fighting was hardest, setting an example of endurance and cheer which kept his men wonderfully in hand.

"About noon of September 27, the regiment entered the little village of Montblainville and began the arduous task of mopping up. It was here that Whitney fell, shot by a sniper from a cellar doorway."

But perhaps the best summing up of Whit's character is that shown us in the words of his Major:

"We were all of a cheerful nature but none more so than Dickey. He was always smiling. He was loved and respected not only by his fellow officers, but by his men. The latter is the true estimate of an officer. The men seldom make a mistake."

To anyone who has been in the army, the full force of this statement is apparent. The front is probably one of the greatest tests which a man's character could ever be called upon to endure. If he must make the supreme sacrifice, fortunate is the man who can die as Whit died at the head of his troops, leaving behind him a memory of cheerfulness, unselfishnes, and bravery, loved and respected by officers and men alike.

Roger Sherman Dix, Jr.

The life of a most active undergraduate is a sufficiently hard thing in itself to write faithfully; one feels so much which can never be expressed. But in the case of a quiet, introspective person this honor is one doubly hard to fulfill. The indefiniteness of words makes all writing seem futile. Roger Dix belonged to the latter class. Three elements were cardinal things in his character; a capacity for very deep and sincere friendship, an inspiring happiness and optimism, and an almost unconscious but rigid sense of duty. These qualities were always evident to his friends, but his life in college was such that they were never revealed to a large group of living men who now look with an indescribable pride upon the heroes of 1918 who gave their lives in the war. There is now a natural regret that one could not have known intimately every one of those same heroes. And yet the few who were closest to such a man as Roger Dix cannot but feel that the intense giving to them on his part of all that goes to make up friendship added more toward a perfect fulfillment of his life than would have a more widespread and diffusive activity.

Roger Dix began his service with the American Field Service, Section 1, in which branch he spent from July to October, 1917, on the Verdun front. His section received a Citation Militaire. In November he enlisted in the United States Air Service and was detailed to the French School of Military Aviation at Le Crotoy. On May 12, 1918, he was commissioned Second Lieutenant Air Service, Military Aeronautics. He was on his last training flight on May 15 and was to have received the highest honors of any at the school, when he was killed in an aeroplane accident. He fell from a height of 200 metres and his French pilot was also killed. He was buried with military honors at Le Crotoy.

Ralph Jefferson Feigl

Ralph Jefferson Feigl, known by us as Jeff, was one of our best. There was in his manner a deep strain of his Texan ancestry, although he was born and raised in New York State and fitted himself for college at Cutler School of New York City. He came to Cambridge with us in 1914 well prepared to be a Harvard man. However, before the football season was over, he was forced to withdraw from college, owing to a badly injured knee; and thus Feigl and the class lost the opportunities afforded by the Freshman Dormitories of getting mutually acquainted.

He returned to college in 1915 and that year began his military training by enlisting in the Harvard Regiment. He went to Plattsburg in 1916; became an acting lieutenant in the R. O. T. C. during the following year; and in May was accepted for the First Officers' Training Camp at Plattsburg, where he received his commission as 2d Lieutenant in August, 1917. The following month he sailed for France as a casual, and was detailed to the Artillery School at Saumur, where he applied himself so diligently and efficiently that in December he was offered a promotion and an instructorship in the Artillery School, which he refused, preferring active service. In January, 1918, he was assigned to Battery F, 7th Field Artillery, 1st Division, and later was detailed as liaison officer. While acting as observation officer of the battalion on March 21, 1918, he met his death and gained the honor of being the only American "killed in action" on the first day of the German drive. The esteem of his fellow officers and men was expressed at that time in a burial with full military honors, and since then in naming all American Legion posts of the 1st Division wherever located "Jeff Feigl Posts."

He was, among us, always known for the nobleness and gentility of his every-day manner. He never failed in interest and sympathy. He had, particularly to those who knew him well, a rare kind of sustaining philosophy whose expression required no words. By his instructors and coaches he was regarded as a man of singular perseverance and large abilities. In the sterner work of halting a desperate advance by the enemy, that perseverance and ability earned for him a fame which is not likely soon to fade. There was in Jeff such a quiet sense of triumph as must have moved Emerson to write that

> "Some men worry themselves into nameless graves, > Others forget themselves into immortality."

Alfred Wild Gardner

Alfred Wild Gardner was born August 29th, 1895. He entered St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H., in the fall of 1908, graduating six years later with highest honors. He was always a leader but he confined himself to no one branch; he led in everything he did.

He excelled each year in studies, as in sports, and he worked hard as an officer of many of the school societies. Throughout his career at St. Paul's he showed the leadership which won for him his last year the Frazier Prize "to the boy who attains highest distinction jointly in scholarship and athletics."

Entering the Freshman Class at Harvard in the fall of 1914 he continued to lead in both athletics and studies. He became a member of most of the prominent clubs, such as the D. K. E., Institute of 1770, Stylus, Hasty Pudding, Phoenix, S. K. and A. D.

The Harvard Regiment formed during his Sophomore year gave him his first military training. At the Plattsburg Camp the following summer, and the R. O. T. C. at Cambridge in the fall, he was a Sergeant.

His hard work was rewarded for about a month after war was declared he was appointed a Second Lieutenant, Infantry O. R. C. and was ordered to Plattsburg to help instruct other student officers.

Three months later he was assigned to Co. H, 305th Infantry, 77th Division, then forming at the vast new Camp Upton, Yaphank, L. I. Within a few weeks he was made a First Lieutenant, National Army and Adjutant of the 2nd Battalion.

But Alfred was not satisfied with his job as Adjutant, he wrote "I'd rather be in the line with the men." As a first step he went to the British "Scouting, Observation and Sniping School," Aix-le-Château. He was always a beautiful shot with the army rifle so he must have thoroughly enjoyed this training.

On rejoining his regiment he again sought to be put back in his old Company with his men. He had met with no success, however, when on June 6th the regiment started for the front, receiving further training enroute. Returning from a tour of observation in the Migneville sector then held by the 42nd Division, Alfred was, to his delight, assigned to Company E, the night after his Battalion took over the front line July 23rd. He was once more a "line soldier" and knowing his character, I know what keen joy it must have given him. He always felt his job as Adjutant was too soft, he longed for a chance to do a real soldier's work and he now had that chance.

The sector was fairly quiet and the Battalion was moved from place to place for some weeks, gaining all the time, however, more experience with the Boches. After a short time at the Gas School at Chaumont, Alfred rejoined his Company in support on the Vesle. Here, under orders, he led his men a thousand yards in plain view of the Boches under bright moonlight to a sunken railroad cut, and later evacuated them without a single casualty. This action gained for him more than ever the utter devotion of his men and the unstinted praise of his fellow officers. Further fighting followed at the Vesle and on the Aisne, and always without the support of our aeroplanes, which had not yet begun to arrive in numbers.

Soon after the start of the Argonne offensive September 26th, Alfred, now in command of his Company, found himself with his men at the bottom of a ravine, with the Boches in strong well-concealed machine-gun positions along the top of the hill. A frontal attack, regarded as suicidal by Company, Battalion and Regimental officers, was ordered, and Alfred, knowing it was sure death, advanced at the head of his Company. Encouraging and urging his men forward he was shot through the head and instantly killed by machine-gun fire before he had gone seventy-five yards. His Division citation reads:

"1st Lieut. Alfred W. Gardner, Co. E. 305th Infantry—who in the Argonne Forest on the afternoon of October 3rd, 1918, in an attack on a series of strong German machine-gun nests, with utter disregard of his personal danger, led his Company up the steep slope of a ravine in the face of murderous machine-gun fire, and was himself killed in the action. In so doing he afforded the men of his command an example of exceptional devotion to duty and bravery and self-sacrifice, and in his life and death has been a constant inspiration to his men."

In March, 1919, he was awarded the D. S. C. for: "extraordinary heroism in action in the Argonne Forest, France, October 3, 1918. Attacking enemy machine gun nests he displayed the highest courage when he led his company up a steep slope in the face of murderous fire. Before he could accomplish his objective he was killed."

He died as he had lived, like all true leaders, thinking not of himself but of others, respected, and loved by officers and men alike. After Alfred's death his colonel wrote "I think he was without doubt the most beloved officer in the regiment." This is the soldier's highest compliment, "for a company know what its leader is made of." "His course was right and he fought to the end."

In his life and in his death Alfred Gardner typified the very best of young American manhood, alert, eager, kindly, thoughtful of others, and full of that courage which finally gave us the victory in this Great War. In the words of his striker we find the key to Alfred's whole career. "His course was right and he fought to the end." Who can say more?

Clifford West Henry

The military career of Clifford Henry speaks for itself. His very character is revealed in it more clearly and more eloquently than in any writing which his friends might do now. In college he was a slow, deliberate, sure person, who never spoke before he thought well and his thinking was usually of the very highest kind. There was a certain reserve about him which kept many from knowing him intimately, but even in his undergraduate relations there was periodically revealed a touch of indomitable courage and iron convictions which only heroes have. He could not be a flashy, sensational hero; he was a man who was always ready for the situation which was presented. His mind was such that he could not entertain a thought of failure and in no phase of his life did he even approach a faulty handling of a job.

He was born on June 28, 1896, at New York City and prepared for college at Trinity School. He was a member of the Aeronautical Society, The Weld Boat Club, The Smoker Committee, and a Junior Usher on Class Day, 1917.

After being a member of the Harvard R. O. T. C. he was sent to the Army Service Schools at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, on November 26, 1917. He was commissioned 2d lieutenant, February 25, 1918, and assigned to the 46th Infantry. He was stationed at Camp Taylor and at Camp Gordon, at which camp he was chief bayonet instructor. He offered his services to take replacement troops to France and sailed on July 17. On arriving in France he was attached to the 104th Marines but when he found that this would mean police duty in Paris he asked to be transferred. On August 26th he was assigned to Company F, 102d Infantry, 26th Division, and on September 12 designated officer in command. On September 4 the division moved up to Verdun and took up its position for the St. Mihiel drive. On the night of September 13-14 he led a party of skirmishers and captured a German outpost and at Vigneulles they captured 284 prisoners. In the advance of September 14 he was wounded severely by a fragment of a shell which killed or wounded 50 of the officers and men. He died on October 17, 1918, at Allerey. He was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross with the following citation:

"For extraordinary heroism on September 14, 1918. During the Saint-Mihiel offensive, although mortally wounded and suffering great pain, he gave information for the disposition of his men. He refused first aid until other wounded men had been taken care of."

He was also awarded the Croix de Guerre with the following citation:

"Il montrait une perseverance, bravoure, at une intelligence admirable pendant septembre le 13 et 14, 1918, a Saint-Mihiel en personne ferme le saillant et prenant trois cent prisonniers" (general order of the Army).

George Merrick Hollister

In a memorial life of George Hollister written for Middlesex School by his brother, a picture of George is given as a young boy with a most beautiful smile, running around with his stockings falling down. It is almost impossible to keep that picture out of one's mind. There never was a man in college with a more mature mind than George, but there also never was one more filled with the spirit of youth. He was ingenuous, trusting, hopeful and idealistic like a very young boy; he was thoughtful and reasonable like a man of much experience. But always the boy. One saw it when George steamed by on his bicycle when a candidate for the Crimson in his freshman year or when in an ecstasy of excitement he made his preparations for leaving to join the American Ambulance. Not a rough-and-tumble spirit. His youthfulness lay in a purity, never prudish, the fact of being unspoiled and clean. No face ever had more magnetism; a smile of warmth and friendship was there as an irresistible force. Where most men were admired and respected, George was loved, and his own heart was capable of unstinted love and sympathy. There was not a particle of snobbishness about him; all sorts and conditions of men were his friends, and yet sincerity and genuineness prompted his every act.

He served two enlistments in the American Field Service, Section 3, from March 22, 1916, to April 23, 1917, with the French Army on the Verdun front. He was awarded the Croix de Guerre with the following citation:

"S'est touhours distingué par son dévouement et son entrain, particulièrement au cours des évacuations périlleuses du 22 juin au 2 juillet 1916 opérées parune route continuellement bombardée."

After his second term of enlistment had expired he went with the French Army to Macedonia in the Ambulance Corps. On his way home in 1917 war was declared and he determined to enter the regular army immediately. He spent four weeks at Harvard in intensive training and then went to the Provisional Officers' Training Camp at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. He was commissioned Second Lieutenant February 25, 1918, and assigned to Company A, 61st Infantry, 5th Division on March 11th. He went to France in April. He participated in the following engagements: Anould sector, Saint-Die sector, and Saint-Mihiel offensive. He was killed in action on October 12, 1918.

Ronald Wood Hoskier

Ronald Wood Hoskier was born March 21, 1896, at South Orange, New Jersey, the son of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Hoskier. Entering St. George's School in 1909 he spent the next five years of his life among friends who will always remember his splendid nature—one which never failed to impress all who came in contact with him. He was quiet, reserved, full of determination and possessed the highest moral and physical courage. One immediately perceived in him the ability to overcome the most difficult obstacles. It was in February, 1916, after but a year and a half at Harvard, that he said good-bye to his classmates and sailed for France. During his short period of undergraduate life he showed every promise of making a name for himself. He was thoroughly liked and highly respected by all who knew him; an excellent fencer and golfer, an advocate of the best in sport and literature, diligent and always modest. His departure for the war was typical of him. If there was ever a thought of the sacrifice or the danger he never mentioned it to even his closest friends. The idea that it was his duty predominated everything.

Shortly after his arrival on the other side he joined the Lafayette Escadrille. His training period was spent at Dijon, during which he made remarkable progress and was promoted to a sergeancy and breveted pilot. Later the Escadrille moved to Ham, where he met his death eleven months later on the 23rd of April, 1917, in a desperate fight against three enemy machines. His machine gun had been emptied, his observer's not quite, bearing mute evidence that the best had been done and given against overwhelming odds.

The Croix de Guerre with palm was awarded him with the following citation: "Citoyen américain, engagé au service de la France. Véritable âme d'élite pour sa bravoure et son esprit de sacrifice. Est tombé le 23 avril après une héroique défense, dans un combat contre trois appareils ennemis." As a last tribute at his funeral his Commanding Officer, Captain Thénault, in speaking of him, said, "Cetait une nature droite, une âme intelligente, éprise d'ideal et de beauté," words which are an echo of the feelings of all who had the great good fortune to have had him as a friend.

John Lester Hubbard

John Lester Hubbard was born on November 9, 1895, at New Rochelle, New York. He prepared for college at Moses Brown School, Providence. In college he was a person who loved athletics of all kinds, but as is so often the case his physique was such he just missed the university major sport teams. This, however, had no effect on his love for the game, or his enthusiasm, as was shown by his faithful and splendid work on a scrub Freshman football team. He later was on the university gymnasium squad and on the university lacrosse team.

Two points in his character endeared him to many friends: A quiet dignified enthusiasm which never left him in anything he undertook, and a delightful sense of humor flexible enough to be often directed against himself.

When war broke out Hubbard went about military business with great seriousness of purpose, but the naïve point of view that the whole thing was a thrilling amusing experience. The forces which drew many in college near to him had the same effect in the army. His unusual ability as an aviator commanded the respect of all his fellow officers, but what was much more important to him, his great charm made these same officers his friends.

He entered the first Officers' Training Camp at Plattsburg in May, 1917, and in August transferred to the School of Military Aeronautics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology as a private 1st class Aviation Signal Corps. He graduated as an honor man and in October he sailed for France to receive his final training. This training he received at the French School of Military Aviation at Avord, at the 2d Aviation Instruction Center, Tours, at the Aerial Gunnery School, Cazaux, and at the 3d Aviation Instruction Center, Issoudun. On May 13th, 1918, he was commissioned First Lieutenant Air Service, Military Aeronautics, and was attached to the 10th Aero Squadron. He died as the result of an airplane accident on August 18, 1918, at Issoudun.

Orville Parker Johnson

In the fall of 1914 there came together on the fourth floor of Entry A, in James Smith Hall, six Freshmen from all over the country. There were two from Rhode Island, one from Massachusetts, one from Texas, and two from New York. One of these last was a tall blond youth, who went by the name of Pete Johnson.

The son of a Harvard man, Pete had prepared for Harvard at Albany Academy, a school in which military training was taught. Hence it was only natural that he should become interested in military affairs. As his war record shows, he became an officer in the Machine Gun Company of the 8th Massachusetts Infantry, in the formation of which he was vitally interested. In the spring of 1916, he was called to duty on the Mexican border, having by that time become Sergeant, and, for a short time, First Sergeant. Soon he became Second Lieutenant, and went overseas as such.

A taciturn man in public, in private he was a most delightful person. He used to keep an audience of half a dozen or so in an uproar with tales of his adventures on the Mexican Border and elsewhere. By the time he was called into service, near the end of his Junior year, he had done enough collegiate work to be entitled to his "War Degree," which was granted to him, post mortem. In his sophomore year he became a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon, and continued in that fraternity until he left college.

Pete was an only son, and his comradeship with his father was beautiful to see. They were real "pals." One would have thought them brothers rather than father and son. It seemed as if each understood the other perfectly and left nothing to the imagination of the other.

When those of us who knew him saw the notice of his death, we were much saddened by the news. We realized that we had lost a real friend, one who resented any imputation of falsehood or evil, a man of few words and a few real friends, for not many knew him well enough to get behind the reserve with which he surrounded himself in public. He did not wait to be called, but went, voluntarily, long before he was needed, and in the most dangerous branch of the service. His record, part of which I have already cited, is that of one who went to France, like so many others, with high hopes of winning the victory he did not live to see. I should like to add the last part of that record to this brief sketch of his college life. "His Junior year at college was interrupted in May by the mobilization of his regiment, and he was sent to Camp Bartlett at Westfield. The 8th Massachusetts Infantry was federalized in July, 1917, and its Machine Gun Company was designated Company B, 103rd Machine Gun Battalion, 26th Division. He went to France in October. He was killed on July 18, 1918, while looking for sites for his machine guns in a village which he had just reached in the advance."

Robert Morss Lovett

Robert Morss Lovett prepared for Harvard at Phillips Andover Academy. Before going to Andover he spent two years at a private school in Germany—the Institut Roemer in Munich.

As a boy and a young man he possessed great personal charm. He was intellectually and physically fearless; and at the same time among his marked characteristics were his gentle manners, his genuine modesty, and his consideration in act and speech for the feelings and comfort of others. He was singularly free from prejudice and intolerance. He had a genius for friendship, and his circle of friends included widely differing types.

He preferred an active and an outdoor life to one of study. At school in Munich he excelled the German boys in their own sports. He was captain of the school "Deutschball" team which won the championship of Bavaria. He was a precocious mountaineer. At the age of fourteen he climbed the Matterhorn with his father whom he accompanied on long mountain excursions during vacations. He was less ambitious about his studies in those days. He took lightly the rigid discipline of the German school. He played an occasional practical joke on the masters. They punished him with blows on the cheek; but liked him none the less.

At Harvard lacrosse was his main athletic interest. There, too, he regarded his studies as not of first importance. He was always ready to spend an hour conversing with a friend.

He enlisted in the Officers' Training Camp at Plattsburg in May, 1917—towards the end of his Junior year. In August he received his commission as Second Lieutenant, and the following month sailed for France, assigned to Company C of the 103rd Regiment of Infantry, 26th Division. He took part in the fighting about the Chemin des Dames and La Reine sectors. He was killed in the Château Thierry offensive. German machine-gun bullets struck him down while he was leading his men across an open field in a desperate attack. He died July 18, 1918, and was buried near the village of Bouresche.

James Palache

Man can have nothing better said of him than that he will be remembered and loved long after he is gone. This is very true of Palache. He prepared in the West, and, being still a little young to get the most out of four years at a large college, he went to Trinity College at Hartford, Connecticut, for a year.

His enthusiasm was unbounded, always evident in work or play. He was brilliant in the branches of study of which he was fond, especially History and Government, but he never emphasized his work to the exclusion of other less serious things. He loved companionship. His wit, charm and good humor made him ever welcome. The wonderful twinkle in his eye, his cheery greeting, and his pleasant laugh never could be forgotten. He is a great loss to his class and to Harvard.

He attended the first Officers' Training Camp at Plattsburg and also the second, to receive special training. In November, 1917, he was commissioned Second Lieutenant Infantry, but was not assigned. He went to France in January, 1918, and was assigned to Company E, 18th Infantry, 1st Division, in March. He was killed in action May 15, 1918, at Cantigny. While mortally wounded, he continued to fight and in so doing he greatly encouraged and inspired his men.

Charles Parker Reynolds

Charles Parker Reynolds was born August 26th, 1896, at Milton, Massachusetts, the son of Dr. and Mrs. Edward Reynolds, of Boston. During his six years at Milton Academy, in preparation for Harvard, he became greatly respected and admired for his high ideals, sincerity, courage, and devotion to the interests of the school. In his first class year he attained the highest honors of the school—head monitor and captain of the football team. At college he was a strong advocate of preparedness and he set an example by joining Battery A, 1st Massachusetts Field Artillery, during his Freshman year. With this organization he saw service on the Mexican border during the summer and fall of 1916.

His ability as a soldier soon caused him to be promoted to a sergeant and shortly after America entered the war he was one of the first enlisted members of the Battery to receive a commission—a Second Lieutenancy on May 7th, 1917. September, 1917, saw him on his way to France with Battery B, 101st Field Artillery, 26th Division, where, after an intensive training in the use of the French "75," he entered the actual fighting on the famous Chemin des Dames in February, 1918. By this time he had become a First Lieutenant and as such he was firing executive of his Battery through the strenuous days of the Toul Sector. At the end of June the Division was sent to relieve the Second Division before Belleau Woods and Château Thierry and here he was detailed to Regimental Headquarters as Assistant Operations Officer.

Throughout the trying days that followed, through the attacks and counter-attacks of the Aisne-Marne Offensive, Reynolds helped plan and coordinate the fire of the Artillery in a most efficient and commendable manner. Casualties among superior officers not infrequently caused him to assume new duties and on one occasion he was sent forward to his old Battery B to command it for four days in Belleau Woods in the first jump off of the great drive. The Battery during most of this time was exposed to heavy shell fire which made liaison almost impossible and threw him upon his own initiative and judgment.

After a brief rest period in August, the 26th Division again returned to the lines, this time to help cut off the St. Mihiel salient. Reynolds, in the meantime, had been transferred to Brigade Headquarters as Operations Officer, and in this position he helped direct the Artillery attack through the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne Offensives. His ability, personality and calm judgment in difficult situations were always evident and soon resulted in his promotion to Captain. After the Armistice he went back with the Division to the rest area near Montigny le Roi. He had been thoroughly tired out and run down for some time and was only just starting to get back into shape when he became stricken with pneumonia. He was in no condition to resist it and on January 19th, 1919, our class suffered one of its most irreparable losses in his death. He was buried with full military honors in the American Cemetery at Langres. He was cited in General Orders, General Headquarters, A. E. F.: "For gallantry in action near Courpoil, France, July 24th, 1918, while making a reconnaissance for location of enemy positions and our front lines."

Of a rather serious turn of mind and always ready to stand by what he believed to be right Reynolds stood out at Harvard as a man who was ever actuated by the highest motives and as President of Phillips Brooks House he filled a position for which his strong personality was admirably suited. His death terminated a splendid army record and lost to this country a man who was bound to succeed in whatever he undertook.

Philip Newbold Rhinelander

Philip Rhinelander, true to his family, came to Harvard having already acquired a charm of manner and a politeness of bearing which many men never acquire, and few as early as he. Cheerful, bright, and modest, association with him was always the pleasantest. Somewhat youthful at the start to be appreciated by those who saw him little, his popularity was steadily on the increase during his two years at Harvard. He is one of those of whom Harvard should be proudest and for whom France has the highest feeling of respect and appreciation, one of those who saw his duty before his own country entered the war.

With the American Field Service, as an ambulance driver, Philip Rhinelander saw service with the French Army on the Vosges front from July 1, 1916, to January 1, 1917, and with the French Army on the Balkan front from January 1 to July 11, 1917. On returning to France in July he immediately enlisted in the Aviation Section, Signal Corps, and was detailed to 2nd Aviation Instruction Center, Tours. On October 31 he was breveted pilot and detailed to 3rd Aviation Instruction Center, Issoudun. He was commissioned First Lieutenant, Aviation Section, and he received further instruction at various French Camps, including a special course of training in bombing at Clermont-Ferrand. About September 3rd he went to the front with the 20th Aero Squadron, 1st Bombardment Group. During the battle of St. Mihiel he was a member of a group of five planes detailed for special reconnaissance duty. On September 26th he had been on a bombing raid upon Dun-sur-Meuse and was on his way back to the American lines when he was surrounded by a number of German planes three times larger than the American formation. He was killed in action over Murville, France. He was officially credited with the destruction of one enemy airplane.

Henry Richard Deighton Simpson

Henry Simpson was born October 14, 1895, at New York City. He prepared for Harvard at Eton College, England. His intimate associations with England and his love for that country kept him from spending more than a fraction of one year in Harvard, so that aside from a few friendships made before he came to Harvard he was not widely known in his class. His heroic military career, however, will make his name always remembered by the entire class. He belonged to that advanced guard which answered the call of duty long before there was a more obvious obligation. The war to him was an issue of morality and of the finest sentiment, and he did not hesitate a moment in taking his place as a combatant.

Soon after war was declared in 1914 he went to England and entered Sandhurst Military College. He was commissioned Second Lieutenant British Army and assigned to the 6th (Inniskilling) Dragoons. He was transferred to the Royal Flying Corps, British Army, as Second Lieutenant on January 5, 1915. After receiving training at Upavon, Wiltshire, and at Shoreham, Sussex, he was sent to the front. He was assigned to the 9th Squadron, Royal Flying Corps, and was at the front for ten months. While on leave in England he was severely injured in saving the life of a fellow officer in a runaway accident and was laid up for several months. He returned to the front and on January 5th, 1916, he was mentioned in despatches for his daring flying and splendid work in the field. He broke down and was invalided to England. He was killed, on December 20, 1916, at Joyce's Green, England, while testing a new speed scout machine.

Hector William Treble

Hector Treble was born at Buffalo, N. Y., September 10, 1896. He prepared for college at Lafayette High School, and spent two years in Cambridge as an undergraduate. Treble was essentially a scholar and led a quiet life, applying himself diligently to his work. He held the New York State Scholarship in the Class of 1918. He was a person of brilliant intellectual prospects, and there was a thoroughness about his work which put him far toward the top in academic activities. After leaving Cambridge he spent two years at Canisrus College.

He enrolled in the U. S. Naval Reserve Force on August 19, 1918, with the rating of chief quartermaster, and was assigned to the Naval Aviation Detachment, Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He died at the Chelsea Naval Hospital of pneumonia on September 30, 1918.

William Leo Walker

It is through such men as William Leo Walker that Harvard has a just claim to a position as a national university. Walker entered college from Corydon, Iowa, and he brought with him all that was finest from that Middle West country. He was a big person in every way, big in stature and big in heart and mind. He held the Charles Elliott Perkins' Scholarship and his work throughout college was of the highest order. Walker was a frank, straight from the shoulder person, to whom sincerity meant everything. Giving nothing but truth and honor in his associations, he demanded the same from all who were with him, and his presence brought him just what he demanded. Walker was truly an inspiring person, with his complete lack of sham and dissembling. His generosity and openness of mind distinguished him; to have been mean or false in the slightest degree would have been for him organically impossible.

He enlisted in the Aviation Section, Signal Corps, as a private on December 5, 1917, and he was called to active duty on March 27, 1918. At first he was detailed to the Ground School at Berkeley, California, and in June he was stationed at Mather Field, California, for flying instruction. He received his commission as Second Lieutenant, Air Service, Military Aeronautics, on October 22, and was detailed to Fort Sill, Oklahoma. He had been home for Thanksgiving and was returning to Fort Sill when he was stricken with influenza at Kansas City, Missouri. He died of pneumonia on December 10, 1918, at Kansas City.

Aaron Davis Weld

Aaron Davis Weld was born September 1st, 1896, in Boston, Mass. After attending Noble and Greenough School he entered Harvard in the fall of 1914, where he remained till the end of his Junior year. He was commissioned First Lieutenant Infantry on November 27th, 1917, upon the completion of his course at the Officers' Training Camp at Plattsburg during the summer of 1917. Later, after being detailed to the Casual Detention Camp, Camp Merritt, N. J., as officer-in-charge, he sailed for France August 2nd, 1918, having been assigned to Company C, 163rd Infantry, 42nd Division. On September 21st he transferred to Company I, 7th Infantry, 3rd Division, and was killed in action October 11th, 1918, at Cunel Wood during the Meuse-Argonne offensive.

All who came into contact with Weld could not but be impressed by his tremendous energy and enthusiasm in everything he did. Possessing a brilliant mind he won the Harvard College Scholarship in 1915-1916, and in 1916-1917, and in addition found time to enter fully into college activities. He was on the Freshman baseball squad, a member of the Freshman Red Book and Freshman Finance Committees, and Assistant Manager of the University Tennis Team. He was perhaps one of the most cheerful men in his class and was always ready to help others in difficulty over their studies. Everything he did he did well and one always felt that he gave the very best that was in him at all times. The giving of his life in the war was in perfect keeping with that particular side of his refreshing personality.

Bertram Williams

In school, college, and in the army, Bert Williams always displayed a quality of real leadership. He was born September 11, 1896, at Cambridge, and prepared for college at Middlesex School. Nature gave him a thoroughly charming personality, which with an active and almost prophetic mind made him stand out among his classmates from the very first days of his Freshman year. America's part in the war was a reality to him long before the formal declaration, and he had contributed a real bit of service to France before he had enlisted in the American military forces. With a great personal magnetism, and with the faculty of doing in advance what others were certain to do after, his life had a great influence upon his friends, and wherever he was he had a large group of most intimate and admiring friends. A stern sense of duty did not prevent him from being a most agreeable and jovial companion. There was a mixture of qualities in his character which rounded out an almost perfect life.

From February to September, 1916, he was with the Norton-Harjes Ambulance Corps, Section 5, with the French Army on the Verdun front; his section received honorable mention from the French Army for faithful work near Verdun. He returned to college for the year 1916-1917 and in August he enlisted in the Aviation Section, Signal Corps, as a private, 1st class. He was detailed to the School of Military Aeronautics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and in October, 1917, he went to France. In December he was promoted sergeant and detailed to the 3rd Aviation Instruction Center at Issoudun, to the School of Aerial Observers at Gondrecourt in February, later to the 2nd Aviation Instruction Center at Tours. He was commissioned First Lieutenant, Air Service, Military Aeronautics, May 13, 1918, and detailed to the Aerial Gunnery School at Cazaux, to the Bombing School, 7th Aviation Instruction Center at Clermont-Ferrand, on June 17th. On September 1st he was assigned to the 96th Aero Squadron, 1st Bombardment Group, and was sent to the front. He and his pilot were killed in action September 13, 1918, at St.-Mihiel, France, and they were buried at Charey.

Obituaries

David Trautman Schwartz

David Trautman Schwartz died at New Orleans, La., on May 5, 1922. He was born on December 23, 1895, at New Orleans and prepared for college there at The Newman Manual Training School. Before coming to Harvard he spent a year at Tulane University. He was at Cambridge three years, 1915 to 1918, and received the degree of A.B. Since college, he had been in business with Schwartz Brothers, Ltd., at New Orleans.

Elisha Whittlesey

Elisha Whittlesey died in Pittsfield, Mass., on March 14, 1922, after a long illness. He was born on February 6, 1892, at Florence, Wisconsin, but his family moved to Pittsfield soon after his birth and he spent the greater part of his life there. Tim, as he was known at Cambridge, prepared for college at Pittsfield High School and Andover. He was in college three and a half years as an undergraduate, receiving the degree of A.B. In 1917 he drove a camion in the American Field Service in France. During the summer of 1918 he worked as a day laborer in the government shipyards in Portsmouth, N. H. He had a very delicate heart and was rejected in applying for every branch of the service during the war, but his energy and patriotism would not let him sit idly by.

After the armistice in 1918 Tim came back to Cambridge and entered the Graduate Business School. He received his degree of M.B.A. in 1921. He went directly to New York and entered the firm of Case, Pomeroy & Co., as a statistician, in which occupation he was engaged at the time of his death.

In college Tim showed an unusual literary talent. He was an editor both of the Monthly and the Advocate and wrote a great deal of beautiful verse. He had a delightfully strong and stubborn intellect and as an undergraduate was a charming person in any discussion. His quaint manner, his cheerfulness, and his idealism endeared him to many, for he had all the qualities of a perfect companion. He was a most loyal and enthusiastic member of the class, never allowing himself to get out of touch with undergraduate activities and intensely interested in anything to do with Harvard.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION (REGULAR)

American Expeditionary Forces,
USAPO 740 June 20, 1918.
General Orders No. 13.

The following action of 2d Lieut., J. R. Busk, Inf. R. A. 38th Infantry, is mentioned as deserving of particular commendation as showing the determined effort of this officer to accomplish at all hazards a mission on which he had been sent:

On the night of June 16-17, 1918, this officer was designated to cross the Marne River with a patrol for the purpose of capturing and bringing back a prisoner, by surprising any of the enemy who were moving: he had not accomplished the mission after having waited until almost daylight: when he boldly entered a wood supposed to be occupied by the enemy, when he encountered a hostile detachment which fired on his patrol and severely wounded him.

By Command of
MAJOR GENERAL DICKMAN.
RAYMOND SHELDON,
Lt. Colonel, General Staff.
Chief of Staff.

Official
E. A. JEUNET,
Lt. Col., Infantry R. A., Adjutant.

Section IX EXTRACT

* * * * * * *

Joseph R. Busk, second lieutenant, 38th Infantry, 3d Division, for extraordinary heroism in action east of Château-Thierry, France, June 17, 1918. Despite the coldness of the water, the swiftness of the current, and the presence of the enemy on the opposite bank, Lieut. Busk completed a personal reconnaissance of the enemy's position by swimming the River Marne, after which he took a patrol across the river in boats and obtained valuable information regarding the movements of the enemy.

PACIFIC PETROLEUM CORPORATION

Huntington Beach, Calif. June 23, 1922.

Mr. F. E. Parker, Jr.,
Cambridge, Mass.
Dear Frank,

Enclosed find check for first installment of endowment policy. This scheme looks like a winner and I hope you can put it over in good style.

This year is the first in a long time that I have missed Class Day in Cambridge. Right now I see no prospect of ever seeing Cambridge again. I am working in the oil fields where vacations are next to unheard of, and where anyone taking Sunday off is looked upon with suspicion. The work, however, is interesting and prospects excellent. At present I am in the engineering department and spend much of my time getting dope on the various wells, with a view to mapping underground conditions, determining the limits of the field, and selecting locations for new wells. We also do more or less exploration work, leasing new oil lands, etc.

Russell Briggs and myself drove out here in December in an ancient ambulance rigged up for camping. The car broke in half a couple of times and we struck blizzards, washouts, and landslides, but managed to get here by Christmas. Russell has since gone home.

I caught a glimpse of V. Knauth, '18, in Santa Barbara some time ago. He is working on the San Francisco Chronicle, or was the last I heard. He had a plan of buying a 30-foot boat and sailing home through the Panama Canal some time this summer if he could find a few congenial shipmates.

Give my best to any Eighteeners you run into.

Sincerely,

ROBERT H. GARRISON.
